This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1883. Excerpt: ... there was no internal organ free from the presence of the exudate, though some of them were much more seriously affected than others, and notwithstanding this there was little or no free liquid found floating in either of the great cavities of the body when opened. Such is the history and post-mortem appearances of these cases, and may I also say, of this mysterious disease. Now that they have been recorded, I shall wait with some degree of impatience to see if any of my professional brethren have had similar experiences, or if any of them can afford me sufficient light to remove the mystery which to me at present enshrouds them. Some of the exudate was sent for microscopical examination, and was found to contain enormous quantities of organisms closely resembling Anthrax Bacilli. The description of the symptoms and lesions, together with the invariably fatal result in these cases, points to the existence of Gloss-Anthrax--or, rather, Anthrax commencing in the mouth and rapidly becoming generalised. See "Veterinary Sanitary Science and Police," voLiL.pp. 123, 125, 130.-- Ed. V. J. BOVINE PRECOCITY. BY J. H. CARTER, M.R.C.V.S., BRADFORD. A Three-parts bred Alderney heifer (the property of T. E. Smith, Esq., Louth, Lincolnshire) was born the last week in March, 1882, and gave birth to a calf the first week in April, 1883, sne being then only a week over twelve months old. She calved easy, and without assistance. Both mother and offspring have done well. Inquiry assisted me to ascertain that when a calf she was out at grass in company with a bull-calf, about two months her senior. CPTrttflnal. THE ETHICS OF VETERINARY SURGERY. One of the most marked characteristics of the present age is the genera.? and growing regard for human and animal life, and the strong,...
