Raven Daniels and Dorian Thomas have been best friends since college. But while the free-spirited bond they share holds their relationship together, it's also the reason they both know they're better off as friends—flirty friends, but friends. So when Raven decides to leave her old life and cheating ex behind in Fort Worth and move to Dorian's turf in sunny Miami to take a job as a middle school art teacher, they're both excited about the prospect of being around one another full-time. As the social media manager at a prominent company, Dorian knows his city, and he's eager to show his girl the ropes. But one night, emotions run high and everything about their platonic relationship is put to the test. A series of events is set in motion that neither one of them is prepared for, events that force them to answer the question... is love always worth it?
